Comprehension:

Dostoevsky's biography was as dramatic as the plots of his novels. Born in Moscow in 1821, Fyodor was the second son of an army doctor, Mikhail Andreevich, who practiced at the Mariinsky hospital for the poor. Hailing from a family of clergymen, Mikhail had been raised to the nobility through his state service, but the family remained impoverished despite his professional ability and social pretensions. Family finances were further damaged by the purchase of a small estate near Moscow that failed to yield a decent income, exacerbating Mikhail Andreevich's naturally irritable temperament. By contrast Dostoevsky's mother, Maria Fyodorovna, who took charge of the estate whilst her husband remained in Moscow to work, gained a reputation as a humane and compassionate landowner. Both parents were devoted to their children's education, instilling in them a love of European and Russian literature as well as a solid religious upbringing. Both the religious dimension of Dostoevsky's novels and his use of Gothic features and melodramatic plots can be traced back to his childhood reading.
